Long

NinaJo's music blends indie pop with a timeless, story-telling sound that pulls you in and holds you close. The Alabama based singer/songwriter is self-produced, with an acoustic, clear sound and striking vocals. Her songs are a glimpse into the acute emotions of being human with a musicality of warmth and comfort.

She is currently mixing her first album, born to be brave—a musical expression of her healing journey from complex childhood wounds. These songs offer listeners a glimpse into the traumatic pieces of NinaJo's past, her recovery from PTSD, choosing herself, and re-discovering her identity amidst the chaos. Her sound is emblematic of her story and her soul, transparently honest yet hopeful.

Her journey as a songwriter began at a very young age, with her making up her own hooks and tunes before she knew how to spell her own name. Some of her earliest recollections are of writing down original lyrics on a giant poster board on the kitchen floor at age five.

Her songs today are hook-inspired and vocally driven, with a voice that holds and empowers listeners toward embracing reality in both its beauty and devastation.

While she finishes her album, she continues to gig and release smaller projects such as her latest single, piano days—an anthem to these younger songwriting days and her final shift into adulthood.

When she isn't making music you'll likely find NinaJo somewhere in nature, being a goof with her husband or adventuring with her dog, Fen.
